

External appearance can tell a lot about us, about our character and our tastes. When we meet a new person, they first look at our external appearance and then our internal. Because of that is the reason why people tend to dress formally in job interviews. People believe that your appearance is connected to success. Therefore, makes it an important part of our life since we want to leave a good impression on people we meet.

On the one hand, external appearance can affect us in a positive way by boosting our self-confidence. When an individual thinks his appearance suits him and fits with the society, not only does he feel confident but also easy going. They will also feel more motivated to try and experiment with new looks which can be a fun activity that can turn into a hobby too. It is mentioned before that when we first meet someone, they will first look at our external appearance. First impressions are extremely powerful. As a life coach by the name Wendy Tando said “First impressions greatly affect what people think about us”. This is a very useful hint that everyone should know because first impressions only happen once per person.

On the other hand, having the need to have an impressive external appearance can be mentally exhausting by making you worry more what people think about you and seeking validation. A good example of worrying too much about this is that when someone worries a lot about how he looks, he will make mistakes. He will buy clothes that think are modern but they won't look good or expensive ones that are actually not worth buying, making him lose money and energy. People tend to think that if they buy an expensive piece of clothing, they will look more successful but that is not true. Because something is expensive does not mean that it is good. There are many budget friendly things someone can buy that are better than luxury items.
